CLARKE COMPANY
IN GREAT FARCE

Mr. Clarke has chosen for tonight's bill another of George H. Broadhurst's plays, "Why Smith Left Home", which has been aptly styled the companion piece of "What Happened to Jones". In which Mr. Clarke scored a personal triumph during the first week of his engagement here. Like "What Happened to Jones", "Why Smith Left Home" has been received with unreserved favor in London, as well as every city of prominence in the United States. It is a distinctively American play, possessing all the dash and "go" of the brightest French farces without any of the disagreeable features of the purely French constructions. It is overflowing with comic situations throughout and there is abundant evidence that the author was intent upon crowding the greatest possible amount of merriment into the evening's entertainment.

The story of "Why Smith Left Home" is in itself unique and diverting and is given up to the solution of its interrogative cognomen. Smith is a young married man, the stress of whose business affairs have prevented him from enjoying the luxury of the conventional honeymoon, in lieu of which he and his bride of a few weeks have endeavored to enjoy each other's society in the seclusion of their own home, only to be disappointed by the presence of their loving relatives in whom the visiting habit is developed to a painful and troublesome degree. In presenting "Why Smith Left Home" Mr. Clarke will make a novel departure from the traditional way of actors by appearing in the role of Lavinia, the cook. It is in fact the leading comedy character and sustains a relation most prominent and vital to the action of the piece.

NORWOODS AT ORPHEUM TONIGHT

Tonight is the opening night at the Orpheum for the Norwoods. Professor Norwood promises about two hours of good solid entertainment and fun and from the press notices of his work in other cities he is surely equal to the occasion. There is always a mystery connected with hypnotism and mind reading that has a fascination for all, and during the week Professor Norwood and Miss Norwood will hand out large portions of this mystery stunt.

The prices that are being charged are of the lowest and there should be a full house to greet the professor when the curtain goes up tonight.

The box office has been open all day at the Orpheum and from the sale so far it is noted that there are lots of people here who are interested in the "Mind ruling Mind" proposition.

The blindfolded drive will take place this afternoon at 4 o'clock, and it will be a wonder and will certainly whet the appetite for more of that kind of work.

The Norwood Hypnotic Comedy Co. is on a tour of the world under the able management of Bert D. Holt of Chicago. He is the treasurer and general director of the aggregation and will surely make a success of the venture, even if it is to be through a foreign country, for he appears to be right at home in his work and this is not the first venture he has made in the same line.
